Coal Law Short Course

On August 2-6, 2009, the first Coal Law Short Course will be held in Morgantown, WV, as a cooperative effort of the Energy & Mineral Law Foundation and the West Virginia University College of Law.

The short course was developed to minimize the training time required of law firms and coal companies by providing young lawyers with a comprehensive understanding of the myriad of laws and regulations which affect the mining, production and the sale of coal.

The course begins on Sunday evening at the Radisson Waterfront Place Hotel, with an overview of the course and presentations on the geology of coal and the various types of coal mining.

The program moves to the WVU College of Law Lugar Courtroom on Monday morning for three days of intensive instruction, culminating with a case study of a sale of coal assets, which will integrate the previous three days' materials. Participants will evaluate the parties' interests and legal requirements of a mock transaction, including due diligence, finance and risk, negotiating terms, documents, filings and regulatory approval. Extensive course materials will be provided for the 25-hour course.

Registration includes all educational sessions and materials, Sunday reception and dinner and Tuesday night cook-out at the Radisson, and daily lunches and refreshment breaks at the law school. The classroom study ends on Wednesday, but all registrants can sign up for optional tours of mining facilities in the Morgantown area on Thursday.

The Energy & Mineral Law Foundation's Mission:

To foster the study of energy, mineral and natural resources law through quality, cost effective and timely education, and provide a continuing forum for industry, government, attorneys, legal scholars and the general public to engage in an intellectually honest examination of the issues.

The Energy & Mineral Law Foundation (EMLF) is a 501(c)(3) tax-exempt educational Organization, governed by a Board of Trustees comprised of individual attorneys, landmen, Bar Associations, Trade and Professional Organizations, and Law Schools: Bar Associations – American Bar Association – SEER, Illinois State Bar Association, Kentucky Bar Association, Ohio State Bar Association, Pennsylvania Bar Association, Tennessee Bar Association, and West Virginia State Bar Association; Law Schools – American University, Appalachian School of Law, Indiana University, University of Kentucky, University of Oklahoma, University of Pittsburgh, Southern Illinois University at Carbondale, University of Texas at Austin, Texas Tech University, and West Virginia University; Trade & Professional Organizations – American Association of Professional Landmen, Kentucky Coal Association, Kentucky Oil & Gas Association, National Mining Association, Ohio Coal Association, Ohio Oil & Gas Association, Pennsylvania Coal Association, United States Energy Association, Virginia Oil and Gas Association, West Virginia Coal Association, and the West Virginia Oil & Natural Gas Association.

Who should attend
this short course

Has your firm recently hired associates to work on your coal cases? Are you a practitioner new to the field of coal law and want to gain a better understanding of how the laws work together? The EMLF Coal Law Short Course is designed to give lawyers who are new to the practice of coal and energy law the tools to handle issues arising in both litigation and transactional settings. While the lawyer in practice 0-5 years will benefit from this short course, landmen, business people and engineers desiring to gain a better understanding of the laws and regulation of coal will find the program invaluable.

Course Objectives
for Attendees:

- Acquire an overall knowledge of the laws and regulations impacting coal mining and transactions involving coal companies
- Understand mineral ownership concepts unique to coal development
- Synthesize environmental, labor, and safety law concepts in the evolving practice of energy law
- Develop a working knowledge of elements necessary to fulfill one's role as a practitioner in coal asset-based transactions

Morgantown, West Virginia – a city of contrasts

Recently heralded as one of the top small cities in which to live, Morgantown is known for its education (West Virginia University), its healthcare, its one of a kind personal rapid transit system (the PRT) and its low unemployment rate.

It is also known for a low cost of living, low crime rate and easy accessibility in a scenic setting where you can hike a forest trail, raft a wild river, browse quaint downtown shops, feast at great restaurants and enjoy a show or art exhibit.

Among its accolades are recognition as the third best small town in America (Mens Journal); fifth best small place for business and careers (Forbes); 29th smartest place to live (Kiplinger's Personal Finance) and one of the best sports cities (The Sporting News).

Zackquill Morgan settled the area around 1772; by 1783, Morgan commissioned a survey of the land, dividing it into streets and lots – and Morgan's Town was born.

The city, with a population of around 700, was officially incorporated in 1838 – and has been growing ever since. Around 30,000 people live in Morgantown proper but the surrounding metropolitan area, including Preston County, has over 100,000 residents.

Situated at the junction of Decker's Creek and the Monongahela River (which interestingly flows north), Morgantown became the county seat for Monongalia County. Over the years, the town has made a reputation for itself in coal, the whiskey trade and glassmaking.

Natural resources and immigrants talented in glassmaking led to the creation of some of the nation's most beautiful lead crystal and glass pieces. By the late 20th century, most of the factories had closed.

However, the city is reclaiming its riverfront area by creating the Wharf District along the Monongahela. Old railroad tracks have been transformed into recreational trails and the area abounds in activity.

Also active is High Street, downtown's main route, with an abundance of shopping, eateries and cultural opportunities, with 75 retailers, 35 restaurants and 100 professional businesses – a vibrant area.

Some of those historic buildings from Morgantown's early days are still standing, plus there are museums and other sightseeing opportunities.

For more information, go to www.tourmorgantown.com.

From the beauty of the Coopers Rock overlook to jetskiing on Cheat Lake to the challenge of white water rafting or the innovative technology of the PRT – personal rapid transit system in Morgantown, one of the few such systems in the nation – Morgantown has earned its reputation as one of the best small cities in which to live.
